Frustrations mount as state says it will not entertain maintenance agreements

BY BEN CONLEY

The West Virginia Division of Highways has no interest in any agreements, deals, memorandums or pilot programs through which counties or municipalities could address the condition of state routes.

DOH Chief Engineer of Operations Joe Pack explained uate all available opportunities as much in response to questions from The Dominion Post.

"The WVDOH is not going to entertain any ideas which involve abdicating our responsibility in maintaining the roads in the state of West Virginia," he "However, explained. WVDOH will continue to eval-to make improvements in the performance of organization."

The questions were put to the DOH in light of mounting frustrations from both county and municipal officials over the conof dition state-maintained routes.

In addition to actual road conditions, weeds are growing unchecked along major thoroughfares, at interstate exits and sprouting up through medians. Signs and sight lines are obscured by overgrowth.

Smith, Mountain Line board negotiating terms for CEO position

BY BEN CONLEY

BConley@DominionPost.com

The Mountain Line Transit Authority's search for a new CEO spanned the country.

It even drew some interest from Canada.

And while it's not yet official, it now appears as if the search actually started and ended right down the hall from the board's meeting room.

Maria Smith, a 16-year Mountain Line employee and the interim CEO since Dave Bruffy left the position in July, has been offered the job and is currently in contract negotiations with the MLTA Board of Directors.

The board met in executive session as part of Wednesday's regular monthly meeting before voting to counter an offer put forward by Smith.

"We're negotiating a contract at this time. She had requested some additional benefits, and we intend to provide her with a counteroffer," Board President Jenny Dinsmore said.

Dinsmore said Smith is the only applicant the board has interviewed at this time.

"We aren't really looking at anybody else. Maria is solid. She knows what she's doing, and she handles things the right way. It's just a negotiation of benefits," she said.

Prior to July, Smith spent five years as Mountain Line's assistant manager of administration and marketing under Bruffy.

Mountain Line received 12 applications for the opening. They represented a handful of states, including Oregon, Texas, Illinois, Indiana and Pennsylvania and even stretched north of the border, with two coming from Ontario, Canada. Dinsmore previously

Transformation moves on to Academic Support Units

Libraries will realize $800K in savings through staff cuts

BY DAVID BEARD

DBeard@DominionPost.cm

WVU Libraries will develop a plan to reorganize to realize $800,000 in savings through personnel reductions, Associate Provost Mark Gavin said during Wednesday Campus Conversation.

As part of the ongoing Academic Transformation, Libraries was one of 20 Academic Support Units that operate under the provost's office and were subject to review to create a "more focused and cost-efficient suite of academic support services to assist colleges and schools while better serving students' needs."

As with the academic programs subject to review, the ASU review could lead to six possible outcomes including continuing at the current level of activity, continuing with specific actions or reduced level of activity, and discontinuance.

The process began in May, Gavin said, but was paused during the academic program review. It included self-studies, discussions with unit leaders and stakeholder surveys. Unlike the academic reviews, ASU reviews were not subject to Board of Governors rules and the recommendations are not appealable — though discussions will continue.

The Institutional Research ASU results are still forthcoming, Gavin said. Of the other 19, none were recommended for discontinuance; six were continued as-is; 11 were continued with specific action: two, including Libraries. were recommended to continue with reductions.

The recommendation letter sent to Libraries Dean Karen Diaz noted that the review revealed "numerous and substantial questions" about staffing levels, but that it is effective at providing key services and stakeholder comments were "voluminous and positive."

Grain spat drags Ukraine's ties with ally Poland to lowest point since start of Russian invasion

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — A dispute about whether Ukrainian grain should be allowed to enter the domestic markets of Poland and other European Union countries has pushed the tight relationship between Kyiv and Warsaw to its lowest point since Russia invaded Ukraine last year.

Polish leaders have compared Ukraine to a drowning person hurting his helper and threatened to expand a ban on food products from the wartorn country. Meanwhile, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy suggested that EU allies that are prohibiting imports of his nation's grain are helping Russia.

Poland, on NATO's eastern flank, has been a staunch supporter of Ukraine, sending weapons and humanitarian aid and opening its borders to refugees.

Now, Polish officials, who are trying to win parliamentary elections next month with help from farmers' votes, are expressing dismay over some of Ukraine's latest moves, including a World Trade Organization complaint over bans on Ukrainian grain from Poland and two other EU countries.

"Alarmingly, some in Europe play out solidarity in a political theater turning grain into a thriller. They may seem to play their own roles. In fact, they're helping set the stage for a Moscow actor," Zelenskyy said Tuesday during the U.N.

General Assembly.

Poland's deputy foreign minister, Pawel Jablonski, Wednesday voiced "strong protest" of Zelencomments Ukrainian Ambassador Vasyl Zvarych.

"indicated Jablonski that it is untrue, as far as Poland is concerned, and that the opinion is unjustified toward the country that has been supporting Ukraine from the very first days of the war," the Polish Foreign Ministry said in a statement.

meeting, President Tom Bloom said this past Saturday's prime time showdown with backyard rival Pittsburgh should have been a showcase for West Monongalia Virginia, County and the city of Morgantown.

'The amount of calls I've received is unbelievable Some of them were from people who don't live here, and they were very angry at Monongalia County and very embarrassed that we as a county commission were allowing this to happen," he said. "It was difficult to listen to because we're as frustrated as they are."

Bloom said his frustration comes largely from a seeming lack of interest at the state level. He said DOH officials canceled a meeting with local representatives scheduled for last Thursday and have not responded to his calls to reschedule.

The city of Morgantown has made multiple overtures to the DOH in recent months. The city has asked about scheduling meetings, taking over smaller statemaintained connector streets within its boundaries and even potentially working with the state on an agreement or pilot program to take on certain maintenance projects with DOH reimbursement.

Assistant City Manager Emily Muzzarelli said the city has never received a response from the state.

"The residents of Mon County are suffering from lack of maintenance and attention on state roadways, and their pleas for help have been unanswered by the state," she said, noting the city was asked for, and provided, creative solutions to address its concerns.

"However, we are hitting a wall with how to provide a transportation system that our residents deserve. Our main issue is we do not have jurisdiction to work on statemaintained roadways without their permission and, therefore, cannot make the necessary changes," Muzzarelli said.

"At the end of the day, we want every person in Morgantown to feel safe using our roads. Our mission as a city is to deliver excellent services that encourage the community to thrive, and right now, the WVDOH is hindering us from doing so. We want to be part of the solution and are more than willing to be an active partner with the WVDOH in implementing an action plan going forward."

Bloom reiterated that his frustrations are not with county and district personnel.

"I'm flabbergasted that the state is not responding to the governmental bodies. What did we do to deserve this type of treatment at the state level? It really frustrates me that [The Dominion Post] got an answer, but the city of Morgantown has been waiting on one for five months," Bloom said. "If they don't want the city or anyone to do anything, then fix the roads and take care of them. Doing nothing is not a

Local firefighter case will set statewide precedent

The ongoing dispute between the City of Morgantown and local firefighters over holiday pay has made its way to the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. Whatever the court decides will impact paid firefighters across the Mountain State.

As Erin Cleavenger reported, International Association of Firefighters Local 313 contends Morgantown did not fully compensate firefighters for shifts worked on holidays. In a previous ruling, Monongalia County Circuit Court Judge Phillip D. Gaujot said firefighters were entitled to time off or additional pay only during the legal holiday itself, but the state Wage Payment and Collection Act does not apply to this case, so the City of Morgantown did not fail to pay "wages" or "fringe benefits" to the firefighters. (Morgantown firefighters work 24-hour shifts beginning at 8 a.m., so they did not receive holiday pay for hours worked outside the official holiday.)

Attorney Teresa Toriseva is representing Morgantown's firefighters. She believes the clear language of the WPCA mandates that firefighters get holiday pay whether they work the holiday or not. She argued before the state supreme court that firefighters' 24-hour shift is typically considered one calendar day when calculating payroll, sick days, vacation days, etc., regardless of when the shift begins, so holiday pay should be calculated that way as well.

The West Virginia Supreme Court is tasked with deciding whether holiday pay under the firefighter holiday pay statute is a "wage" under the Wage Payment Collection Act and whether a firefighter will be paid for their entire shift or just the portion.

We don't know what the high court will decide. What we do know is that whatever the state supreme court decides, it won't just affect Morgantown — it will set a precedent that impacts paid fire departments throughout West Virginia.

Several cities have faced similar cases in the last few years, including Huntington and Parkersburg. In those cases unlike the Morgantown's — judges ruled in favor of the

In the Huntington case, according to the West Virginia Record, "firefighters who have no duty hours on the relevant holidays will be provided an additional 12 hours of paid time off over and above what they now receive under the current Collective Bargaining Agreement. A firefighter who ends his shift at 7 a.m. on the holiday will receive an additional 5 hours of paid time off over and above what they now receive under the current CBA. Those who start their shift at 7 a.m. on a holiday will be paid according to the CBA.'

In the Parkersburg case, as also reported by the West Virginia Record, the judge ruled "the city shall pay the firefighters based on their 24-hour shift, meaning 36 hours of pay or 24 hours equal time off for each legal holiday. ... [F]irefighters who worked overtime during previous holidays are owed wages for two times their regular rate of pay."

The City of Huntington has already agreed to a backpay settlement, but both it and Parkersburg will look to the West Virginia Supreme Court's decision in the Morgantown case for any payments and policies moving forward. This makes Morgantown's case the one to watch. It will either reaffirm what other cities have been told to do, or it will reverse those lower court rulings.

The real reason Hunter is in trouble

HUNTER BIDEN WAS CHARGED LAST THURSDAY WITH THREE FELONIES RELATED TO LYING ON A 2018 APPLI-CATION TO BUY A GUN. BUT IT'S HARD NOT TO CONCLUDE THAT HIS TRUE OFFENSE is being the son of a president whom Republicans are hellbent on vilifying and defeating.

The indictment largely relies on Biden's false claim that he was not using illegal drugs when he applied to purchase the firearm. In fact, he was then in the depths of the cocaine addiction that drove a series of travails that Republicans continue to weaponize against his father.

The Justice Department had previously negotiated a plea agreement with Biden that included a gun charge following some five years of investigation by David Weiss, Trump's U.S. attorney for Delaware, whom President Joe Biden allowed to remain in office in a departure from standard procedure. Hunter Biden agreed to plead guilty to two misdemeanor tax offenses and enter a pretrial diversion under which the felony gun charge would be dropped if he stays on the straight and narrow for two years. Such agreements are a fairly common means of disposing of less serious charges.

The plea deal unraveled for unusual reasons having nothing to do with Biden. The parties imprudently included provisions that gave a judge legitimate misgivings about whether she was being called on to participate in a determination that Biden would not be prosecuted on other charges, assuming an executive branch function in violation of the separation of powers. The agreement was therefore taken off the table to allow for renegotiation.

But that provided an opening for a firestorm of protest on Capitol Hill from Donald Trump's allies, who railed at the supposed sweetheart deal. As I explained at the time, however, the general outlines of the agreement amounted to a sensible resolution of a case that the Justice Department could well have lost at

It has since become even more obvious that all the rancor over the deal was aimed at the president himself, whom extremists in Congress, whipped up by Trump, are spoiling to impeach. The Republicans have nothing of substance to impeach Biden for, so they are straining to connect him to the sins of his son with ill-founded conjecture. Trump and his supporters' unhinged animus in this cause is so great that the FBI set up a special task force to deal with the unprecedented number of threats against agents and prosecutors working on the Hunter Biden case.

The clearest sign that something really stinks here is that the charges Weiss brought are rarely pursued for their own sake. The department does bring such charges against defendants who use improperly obtained firearms to commit other crimes. And in one or two instances, prosecutors appear to have used such charges against defendants whom they knew to be particularly dangerous. But this indictment over an isolated lie by a relatively harmless firearm applicant seems to be without precedent.

So why was Weiss able to pursue charges that wouldn't normally be brought?

If Weiss were a regular prosecutor, his decisions would be subject to a supervisory structure that would enforce Justice Department policies and equal treatment of similarly situated individuals. But amid the political outcry, the U.S. attorney petitioned Attorney General Merrick Garland for special counsel status — never mind that special counsels are supposed to come from outside the department. Garland's hand was effectively forced under the circumstances, and Weiss got what he asked for, along with a large measure of independence from normal procedures.

Antonin Scalia, most conservatives' beau idéal of a Supreme Court justice, warned us about this.

"The independent counsel ... operating in an area where so little is law and so much is discretion, is intentionally cut off from the unifying influence of the Justice Department, and from the perspective that multiple responsibilities provide," the late justice wrote. "How frightening it must be to have your own independent counsel and staff appointed, with nothing else to do but to investigate you until investigation is no longer worthwhile.'

Although Scalia's constitutional argument didn't carry the day, the policy concerns he expressed led Congress to repeal the independent counsel law. It was replaced with the special counsel structure through Justice Department regulations that were meant to be more aligned with standard policy. But peculiar political events have conspired to put Weiss in much the same insulated position as the independent counsels of yore, with the same toxic results.

As for Hunter Biden, he still has some legal cards to play. His aggressive and able counsel, Abbe Lowell, will no doubt argue that the charges amount to an unlawful vindictive prosecution. And recent appellate court rulings suggesting that even felons retain their 2nd Amendment rights could cast a constitutional shadow on at least one of the gun charges.

But given that these arguments are relative long shots for Biden, it's likely he will have to go to trial on charges that are seldom brought in the middle of a presidential contest between his father and Trump. That will give radical Republicans in Congress the talking point they need to muddy the waters with respect to Trump's multiple criminal indictments. Weiss has given them just what they wanted.

What about Gina Raimondo for VP?

As JOE BIDEN RUNS FOR A SECOND TERM, WE'LL BE HEARING MORE QUES-TIONS ABOUT HIS AGE-RELATED COG-NITIVE ABILITIES. So far, he's doing just fine. And never mind that his likely Republican opponent, Donald Trump, gave speeches last weekend confusing the current president with Barack Obama and babbling fearfully about Biden leading us into "World War II." For the historically impaired, World War II ended 78 years ago, in our favor, by the way.

Democrats can allay their own concerns by pairing Biden with a very strong running mate, in effect creating a co-presidency. That would require replacing Vice President Kamala Harris. The process could be messy, but it's necessary. Harris is most unpopular.

Several names have come up with one an obvious winner. That would be Gina Raimondo, Biden's super-empowered Secretary of Commerce.

FROMA HARROP

Before going on, let's dispose of the irritating notion Biden must replace a female VP with another female VP. Gender is not, and never should be, a qualification. Making that argument in Raimondo's case is especially unfair to Raimondo. She is a dynamo who already stands toe-to-toe with the world's political and economic leaders, male and female alike.

Because she's been doing serious wonk work, Raimondo, age 52, hasn't been getting the brightlights attention of female pols who do the easy stuff, like talking about abortion rights.

A former governor of Rhode Island, Raimondo is leading the $100 billion campaign to make America the leading chipmaking power and expand broadband access. She likes to call the Chip Act "rocket fuel for our global competitiveness."

Our tech future, including artificial intelligence and supercomputing, shouldn't be relying on the good graces of China, which is close to dominating the world's supply of semiconductors. She will also oversee controls on exports of advanced semiconductors and equipment to China.

Founder of a venture capital fund, Raimondo gets along famously well with business leaders. But she's still a Democrat. Raimondo has imposed some discipline on executive pay by restricting stock options at companies getting government subsidies. As governor, she started free community college and all-day kindergarten in Rhode Island.

For those who want their candidates to offer inspiring backstories, Raimondo has one. She grew up in a "close-knit" Italian American family. When she was in the sixth grade, her father lost his job at a Bulova watch factory after working there 28 years. Raimondo knows the economic and psychic toll of factories closing down.

Harris has marketed herself as a "person of color" who has suffered the hardships that implies, but her father was an economics professor at Stanford and her mother a medical researcher. Raimondo has a much stronger claim to being a child of the working class.

Some on the Democratic left flank think Raimondo is too friendly to business, but those suspicions could be an asset in a general election. She has won a good number of Republican fans and could peel off votes of conservatives sickened by the former grifter-in-chief's reign of chaos.

Last month, The Wall Street Journal ran a profile of Raimondo as glowing as this one. It was titled "Everyone Wants to Talk to Gina Raimondo — Even China."

Raimondo's qualifications dwarf those of all the talked-about running mates for Donald Trump. They dwarf Trump's qualifications as well. A comparison of cognitive abilities would also not be to Trump's advantage.

The proudly pro-business Raimondo could better sell the successes of Bidenomics to the public than Biden has. She would talk economy; he, labor. They could both do foreign policy.

Raimondo playing co-pilot with Biden would offer Democrats a truly powerful ticket in 2024. She belongs at the front of the line of potential new running mates.

Democrats should be asking themselves: "What about Gina Raimondo?"

Home explosion victim has long road to recovery

BY ERIN CLEAVENGER

ECleavenger@DominionPost.com

One of the victims in the Sept. 6 home explosion at 727 Wells St. will likely have a long road to recovery after suffering severe burns in the blast.

Fire investigators with the Morgantown Fire Department said Wednesday the official cause of the explosion is still under investigation; however, firefighters and other emergency personnel on scene Sept. 6 believed the cause might have been a gas leak in the home that ignited when one of the residents attempted to light a

All four residents of the house, Carly Grozier, Maddie Granger, Emma Dodson and Meghan Harris made it out of the structure alive, but Grozier was exposed to the full force of the explosion.

Grozier, a West Virginia University student from Bethlehem, Pa., was air-lifted to an intensive care burn unit at an undisclosed hospital in Pittsburgh. She suffered third-degree burns on 50% of her body. It has been 15 days since the incident and she still remains in the ICU.

The Dominion Post spoke with Grozier's attorney Michael Budner of Saltz, Mongeluzzi, Bendesky Trial Lawyers in Philadelphia, who hesitantly said Grozier's condition was improving, but added that she remains heavily sedated and is "by no means out of the woods."

She is expected to remain in the hospital for the foreseeable future and will likely need to have several surgeries to repair the burned areas.

In the meantime, two GoFundMe fundraisers have been collecting donations to aid Grozier with her hospital bills. As of Wednesday afternoon, the combined total of the two fundraisers, one titled "Carly Grozier Medical Bills" and the second titled "Carly Grozier 727 Wells Explosion," had exceeded $28,000.

Budner said they will be working to schedule a home inspection with insurance companies as well as the fire marshal's office and other potential players in the case for "what is likely to be a litigation."

"We're eager to get justice for these families and, you know, more importantly find out what happened in this tragic explosion and to ensure that explosions and incidents like this don't happen to others," Budner said. "That's our goal here and we are going to keep moving forward to get justice for the family."

No legal action in the case has been officially filed in court at this time.

Following the explosion, crews with Hope Gas surveyed the remainder of Wells Street as well as adjacent streets and did not discover any leaks in the main line. Officials with the gas company said a few minor non-hazardous leaks on service lines were found while performing their review of the area and out of an abundance of caution placed them on an expedited schedule for repairs.

Hope Gas officials remind residents that natural gas is odorless, and an odorant is added so homeowners can detect leaks. The odorant is described as having a sulfurlike smell often compared to a rotten egg.

Any time a gas odor is detected, residents should call the Hope Gas emergency number at 1-800-934-3187 immediately to report it, so crews can be sent to investigate.

MCHD WIC teams up with WVU Medicine Children's to get kids signed up at birth

DPNews@DominionPost.com

On a late summer day, Ralynn Thomas rests in her room at WVU Medicine Children's when she receives a visit from Michelle Kline, a breastfeeding counselor at Monongalia County Health Department's WIC office.

The new mother had already signed up for WIC, the acronym for the federal nutrition assistance program Women, Infants and Children, while she was pregnant with her newborn son, Terry Myers.

The women chat and Thomas, of Rowlesburg, shows Kline a phone photo of Terry doing well in the NICU. If he were there with Thomas, Kline could augment the hospital's lactation specialists' instructions with some breastfeeding tips if needed.

And if Thomas had not already signed up for WIC during her pregnancy, Kline could supply her with an EBT card to use for shopping for approved items.

"Some pay methods stop by the WIC office on their

"Some new mothers stop by the WIC office on their way home from the hospital, newborn in tow, so this is very convenient for them," Kline said.

When you've just packed a tiny baby into your car, repeating the process a few minutes later at the nearby MCHD WIC office is not what most new parents want to do on the way home from the hospital, she explained.

That's where MCHD WIC's new collaboration with WVU Medicine Children's comes in. The hospital contacted the MCHD WIC office earlier this year to discuss a joint effort that would involve having WIC staff on site to connect new mothers and their babies to the nutrition program and help them with any other WIC-related needs

"We have a lot of patients that require a lot of support," said Miranda Nuzum, director of perinatal nursing at WVU Medicine Children's. "So we were tasked to find a way to collaborate with a facility to help prepare our patients or get them signed up for resources prior to leaving the hospital."

Said Cami Haught, program manager of MCHD WIC, which encompasses the WIC offices in Monongalia, Preston, Marion, Harrison, Taylor and Doddridge counties: "We thought it was a great idea."

And the new mothers have embraced the

And the new mothers have embraced the help. "One mom said she was much more comfortable coming into the clinic," Haught said. "She felt like she knew us already. I thought that was really cool. She felt like she had a relationship with us because we met her at the hospital."

WIC provides nutrition and breastfeeding support, health education and other services, free of charge, to pregnant women, mothers, infants and children up to the age of 5 who qualify.

Eligibility guidelines and other information can be found at monchd.org/departments programs/wic. And anyone, not just clients, can take advantage of WIC's free breastfeeding classes.

Kline began visiting the hospital in late June, and since then, she's interacted with about 100 patients. As of early September, 20 new clients had been signed up, 17 clients had joined again since having more children, and she helped 14 with breastfeeding.

She coordinates with WVU Medicine Children's nurses, who point her in the direction of mothers who are settled in their rooms after giving birth, perhaps waiting to be discharged.

"When we are able to get in there and meet with the mamas, it's really nice," Kline said.

"The moms love it."

Early on, Kline was able to provide an entire appointment for a new mother, including issuing an EBT card. "She was super excited that we were able to get it all taken care of," Kline said.

On this day, she's able to make an appointment for Thomas to come into MCHD WIC for her son's first visit.

WVU Medicine Children's officials are pleased at how well the partnership is working.

"We feel it's really going to impact the health of the moms and the babies," said Mary Fanning, vice president of nursing clinical services at WVU Medicine Children's. "It's a strategy to decrease barriers to promote health."

In the beginning, details of the alliance needed to be worked out, such as the more convenient days for WIC to be stationed at the hospital.

Also, "We were thinking of having a central location, because we didn't want to disrupt the patients by going

ACADEMIC TRANSFORMATION

WVU gives updates on faculty RIF process; talks transformation progress at administrative level

BY DAVID BEARD

DBeard@DominionPost.com

WVU administrators provided updates on Wednesday on the academic RIF process and on the assessments of the Strategic Initiatives units and the Office of General Counsel.

The updates were offered during an online Campus Conversation.

President Gordon Gee opened the conversation with some comments on the Academic Transformation process and the resulting cuts to majors and faculty positions — 28 undergraduate and graduate/professional programs, 143 positions — approved by the Board of Governors and announced last Friday.

WVU leadership and the BOG did read and listen to the comments opposing the cuts, he said. "Without a doubt there was great passion." But the changes are necessary. "We either are going to be the architects of our future or we will be victimized by it."

WVU General Counsel Stephanie Taylor said the provost's office will work with the various deans to create a RIF—reduction in force—plan, which will determine who will stay and who will be RIF'd or receive notification of contract ending.

The provost and deans will also review classified and non-classified staff positions for potential eliminations – which is separate from the transformation cuts, she said.

The University RIF Committee — with representatives from the provost's office, Strategic Initiatives and Employee Relations — will review and approve finalized RIF plans, she said.

RIF and nonrenewal notifications went out Monday, Taylor said. Faculty must return Affirmation Forms by Sept. 30.

These forms are required from faculty who wish to be considered for retention or to participate in a teach-out, Associate Provost Tracy Morris explained. These forms will indicate if the program changes will result in a changed workload for those who remain.

Failure to return the form or to agree to work-load change will result in automatic placement on the RIF or non-renewal list. Completing the form doesn't guarantee retention, she said. Resignations and retirements will count toward planned reductions in a department.

Continuing on the timeline, Taylor said RIF plans will be finalized and reviewed Oct. 3-15. For those to be cut, an individual meeting will be held no later than Oct. 16. Due process hearings will be held the week of Oct. 23 and results will be announced Oct. 30. Dec. 1 is the deadline to sign and return a severance agreement.

Administrative changes During the program review process, WVU administration has taken criticism for not undertaking its own cuts — for instance, taking symbolic salary reductions. Wednesday post on X (formerly Twitter) by West Virginia Campus Workers repeated that criticism in a post listing some top salaries and accusing those leaders of being part of the problem.

During Wednesday's Campus Conversation, Rob Alsop, vice president for Strategic Initiatives, described changes going on in his office and the general counsel's.

He described some reorganization that's occurred snce 2014 to achieve some efficiencies and cost savings — though he didn't provide a dollar figure. Currently, they are doing such things as restructuring the units within Talent and Culture and revising the internal human resources policies and the procurement manual, and creating a new budget model to take effect for next fiscal year.

To best implement the WVU Modernization Program, he said, WVU needs to undertake a comprehensive review of administrative functions and processes for better responsiveness and efficiency.

Since 2018, he said, his office has reduced positions and budget. For instance, comparing FY 2018 to FY 2024, Auxiliary and Business Services has reduced its budget from $56.7 million to $51.2 million and is down 78 positions (10%); Information Technology Services has reduced its expenses from $10.3 million to $6.7 million and is down 24 positions (10%)

Only University Police has increased its budget faster than inflation to match competing salary

He was especially close to his parents, grandparents maternal and his built-in best friend. his younger brother Mack.

His mother became a caretaker to him this past year, and even though he was the patient, Keegan was always checking on her to make sure she was okay. Keegan's grandparents were the two people that always gave him the biggest smile. They filled his heart with so much love, and he in turn filled theirs. Mack and Keegan were inseparable growing up and even to this day that remains true. If there was one thing everyone knew about Keegan it was how proud he was of his brother. Ray Epps pleads guilty to Capitol riot charge

WASHINGTON — Ray Epps, a onetime Donald Trump supporter who was the target of a conspiracy theory about the Jan. 6, 2021, attack, has pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge for his role in the riot. Ray Epps appeared remotely for a hearing on Wednesday in Washington's federal courthouse to enter his plea on a charge of disorderly conduct on restricted grounds. The plea comes a day after the case was filed in the Justice Department's massive Jan. 6 prosecution. Epps was forced to flee his Arizona home after he became the focus of a right-wing conspiracy theory that he was a secret government agent who incited the Capitol attack.

Federal judge is barred from hearing cases

A 96-year-old U.S. federal appeals court judge has been barred from hearing cases for a year after a judicial panel said she refused to undergo medical testing over concerns she's no longer mentally fit to serve on the bench. Wednesday's development is the latest in an unusually public and bitter fight over whether Judge Pauline Newman should continue to serve on the Washington-based U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. The matter has sparked a lawsuit and turned judges against one another: Newman insists that she remains physically and mentally fit to decide matters of the law, and has accused her colleagues of making baseless claims in an effort to push her out because of her age.

Vanna White to remain on 'Wheel of Fortune'

Vanna White will remain with "Wheel of Fortune" for two additional seasons. Followig the announcement earlier this year that Pat Sajak would make season 41 of "Wheel of Fortune" his last, White's future with the show was uncertain. Her current contract was set to expire at the end of this season when Sajak signs off in June. Sony Pictures Television announced Tuesday that White has negotiated to remain at the puzzle board through the 2025-2026 season. This means she will be there for host Ryan Seacrest's debut next fall and his second season too. Seacrest told NBC's Willie Geist in an interview that he "can't

Connecticut agrees to a $25 million settlement

HARTFORD, Conn. — Connecticut's attorney general has agreed to a $25.2 million settlement with two men who spent decades in prison for murder, based partly on evidence presented by famed forensic scientist Henry Lee that a judge later found was fabricated. Ralph "Ricky" Birch and Shawn Henning were convicted in the 1985 slaying of 65-yearold Everett Carr, based partly on Lee's testimony that there were stains consistent with blood on a towel. A judge vacated the felony murder convictions in 2020, and the men filed a federal wrongful conviction lawsuit.

Plein air contest coming to Richwood

OPEN AIR RICHWOOD is a unique art competition that will take place Oct. 7 in the scenic town of Richwood. The competition is based on the French art form "en plein air," or "in the open air," which involves painting outdoors with the artist's subject in full view.

This event will be the first-ever plein air contest in and around Richwood. Interested artists from all over who would like to paint the beauty of Richwood are welcome to participate. The competition offers cash prizes for the top three submissions in the adult category and three other categories for highschool, middle school, and grade school students.

Son neglects aging mom when possessive girlfriends come along

DEAR ABBY: My son's former wife was difficult — manipulative, spoiled and possessive. I tried to get along with her, but no matter what I did, she gave me no respect and turned my son against me. They have been divorced for six years. He began dating a few years ago, and each woman is a carbon copy of the ex-wife. He falls right back into the same pattern of ignoring me and letting his girlfriends "possess" him. I don't understand why he feels he has to choose between them and me. He is my son, and I shouldn't have to compete for his love.

I'm getting older now and have asked him for some help, but he refuses. I would just like a regular phone call and to see him. Please advise LOW PRIORITY IN OHIO

DEAR LOW PRIOR-ITY: It seems your son is more attentive to you when he's between girlfriends but has tunnel vision when a new woman enters his life. For your sake, it's important vou begin concentrating on building a reliable support system that is independent of him.

BIG 12 POWER RANKINGS

WVU moves up three spots after defeating Pitt in Backyard Brawl

Sports@DominionPost.com

For the first time this season, the top two spots in the Big 12 power rankings are unanimous.

Texas received all 14 first-place votes for the second week in a row, and Oklahoma was the pick for the second spot in voting from a panel of beat writers that regularly cover the Big 12.

The next five spots are a tossup as 12 points separate the Nos. 3-7 spots between Kansas, UCF, Kansas State, TCU and BYU.

West Virginia made the biggest jump of the week, moving up three spots to No. 10 after beating rival Pittsburgh in the "Backyard Brawl."

Oklahoma State had the biggest drop, going from a tie for sixth to 11th this week after a 33-7 loss to South Alabama.

Previous ranking: 1 Points: 196 (14 first-place votes) Last week: defeated Wyoming, 31-10

Comment: The Longhorns had trouble shaking gritty Wyoming until the fourth quarter, when big plays on both sides of the ball keyed a 21-0 run. Defense remains the team's bedrock; Texas allows just 269 yards and 17 points a game against a trio of opponents that has a collective 6-0 record against squads other than the Longhorns.

WINNING IN THE TRENCHES

Strong offensive line allowing WVU to run the ball at will

BY CODY NESPOR

CNespor@DominionPost.com

Without starting quarterback Garrett Greene last Saturday, just about every one of the 61,000 people inside Milan Puskar Stadium knew what West Virginia was going to do with the football hand it off to CJ Donaldson.

The powerful sophomore running back carried the ball 18 times in the Mountaineers' 17-6 victory. He averaged 5.7 yards per carry despite Pitt basically knowing that Donaldson was getting the ball on almost every play.

So how did he manage to rack up 102 yards and score a crucial second-half touchdown?

"Have you seen my front five? They have to stop them first," said Donaldson, referring to WVU's offensive line. "All I have to do is run behind my front five and I'm going to get that extra yard. I love running behind that front five, they're like the Great Wall of China."

Or the Great Wall of Morgantown, perhaps.

Those front five — left to right, Wyatt Milum, Tomas Rimac, Zach Frazier, Brandon Yates and Doug Nester — have been the lifeblood of WVU's offense so far this season. Even when factoring in loss sack yardage, the Mountaineers are averaging 4.3 yards per carry and just over 200 rushing yards per game (200.3) through three games.

"Great teams do what it is they do even though teams know that's what they've got to do to win ballgames," offensive coordinator Chad Scott said. "When we lost Garrett, they had a pretty good idea that we weren't going to be able to pass the ball as much as we wanted to and we were still able to control the clock, win down in the trenches, run the football and be effective running the football. That's what good teams do."

Transfers and depth have WVU's defensive line playing above expectations to start the season

BY CODY NESPOR

Cnespor@DominionPost.com

After losing all three starters from last season, including first-team all-conference selection Dante Stills, the expectations for West Virginia's defensive line heading into 2023 weren't very high. At least, outside of the program.

Stills went to the NFL, selected in the sixth round by the Arizona Cardinals, oftinjured Taijh Alston went to play for Deion Sanders at Colorado and Jordan Jefferson chose to use his final season of eligibility at LSU. That left junior Sean Martin as the Mountaineers' only defensive lineman with starting experience.

Instead of using the transfer portal to overhaul the position, like has become common practice across the country, head coach Neal Brown and defen-

Hurricane's wide receiver Tyshawn Dues commits to 2025 WVU football class

BY KEENAN CUMMINGS Sports@DominionPost.com

West Virginia didn't have to go far for the first commitment in the 2025 class as the Mountaineers football program added a pledge from Hurricane (W.Va.) 2025 wide receiver Tyshawn Dues.

Dues, 5-foot-11, 160-pounds, also held offers from Kent State, Marshall, Akron and Eastern Kentucky but the Mountaineers surged to the forefront of his recruitment after jumping into the mix with a scholarship offer following an impressive camp performance this summer.

That culminated in Dues committing to the Mountaineers following an unofficial visit to campus for the Backyard Brawl over the weekend.

"I chose West Virginia because it's close to home and because in my heart it felt like the right decision. What pushed them over the top was the atmosphere," he said.

Wide receivers coach Bilal Marshall is the lead recruiter for Dues and was the coach that extended the scholarship offer following a performance where he was one of the most dominant players in camp.

"My relationship with the coaches has just gotten stronger,"

Dues gave the coaching staff the good news following the conclusion of the 17-6 win over the Panthers.

"They were excited to hear me say it," he said.

West Virginia is targeting Dues as a wide receiver and loves his route running, how he can create separation and his ability to create coming in and out of his breaks.

Dues plans to enroll early at West Virginia next December and is excited to have the process behind him.

Comment: The Cyclones can point to missed field goals and an inability to establish a running game as primary reasons for consecutive one-score losses. They'll face a Cowboys team that's similarly struggled to score but has won four of the past five meetings in Ames.

University High School has been through many changes from 35 students in the Old Tea Room in 1925 to the opening of University Demonstration High School on North Price Street in 1933 to the current University High

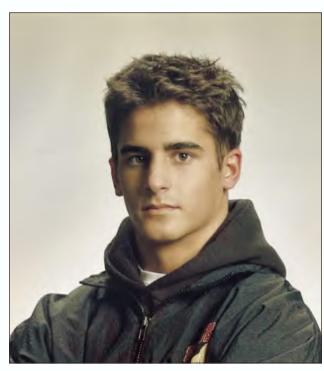

In 2018, a group of interested faculty and alumni met to consider the idea of establishing a University High School Athletic Hall of Fame. Believing that athletics play an integral role in the pride and vitality of the high school setting, members of the committee sought and selected individuals who are to be inducted into the Hall of Fame. They wanted to recognize outstanding athletes, dedicated coaches, athletic directors, administrators and auxiliary personnel who have brought positive recognition to themselves and to UHS. This year's Inductees

Kyle Turnbull

Kyle Turnbull wrestled at University High from 2000-2004. He was the first four-time state place-winner in school history in wrestling. Turnbull made the state finals three times and was a two-time state champion.

In his freshman year, Turnbull was the Amityville Tournament champion, NCAC Tournament champion, finished the season with a 35-6 record and finished fifth in the state meet.

In his sophomore year, Turnbull was the Amityville Tournament champion, NCAC Tournament champion, finished the season with a 37-5 record, and was the state runner-up at 112 pounds.

In Turnbull's junior year, he won the Amityville and Musselman tournaments, while also winning a Region I title and became the state champion at 112 pounds. He finished his junior season with a 36-2 record.

Turnbull finished a perfect 35-0 as a senior, once again capturing a Region I championship and was the state champion at 119 pounds.

During the summer of his junior year, he traveled to Fargo, N.D., for the USA wrestling national tournament. He reached the finals, losing only to future NCAA champion Paul Donahoe and finished second in the nation to become a high school All-American.

Turnbull received a full scholarship to wrestle at West Virginia University. His collegiate career was unfortunately riddled with injuries. Kyle graduated from WVU with a B.S. in finance (magna cum laude) and then attended West Virginia University College of Law, receiving his Juris Doctor degree. Kyle currently lives in Charlotte, N.C., with his family and is a financial services attorney in Holland & Knight's Charlotte office.

Brenda L. Johnson

Brenda L. Johnson attended University High School from 1975-1978. She played basketball and cheered during her time in high school. Johnson was instrumental in putting girls' basketball at University High

She was a starting forward all three years she attended UHS and was team captain her senior year.

Her scoring average was in double figures during her entire basketball career. During her tenure, the team won 80% of its games.

It wasn't until her sophomore year there was statesanctioned postseason play. During both her junior and senior year, the UHS girls' basketball team won the sectional championship behind her leadership.

In her final season (1977-78), she averaged 16 points, 11 rebounds, and five steals per game. At this time, she was the all-time leading scorer, rebounder, and steals

All of her hard work was recognized when she was selected first-team all-state her senior year making her the first ever UHS girls' basketball player to be selected first team. She was the leading vote-getter at the forward position.

Multiple college-level women's basketball programs showed interest in Johnson as a player in their program. She chose to attend cosmetology school in Clarksburg and operated her own beauty shop for years in the Morgantown area. She currently lives in Springfield, Va., where she is happily retired.

Jeffrey Stanley

Jeffrey Stanley worked at University High School for 38 years from 1982-2019. During his 38-year tenure he taught physical education, drivers education, health education, and served as the Dean of Students for a semester. He dedicated much of his life to University High School and the University High School Athletic Department each and every day.

Stanley served multiple stints as University's assistant baseball coach from 1982-1997, 2001-2002 and 2011-2014. He was named the head baseball coach in 2003 and served in that capacity for eight years. During that tenure, he was named the NCAC Coach of the Year, won multiple sectional championships, and lead the team the 2003 state tournament.

Stanley served as University High School athletic trainer for football for 21 years. During that time, he evaluated injuries, provided first aid/emergency care, developed and carried out rehabilitation programs, planned and implemented comprehensive programs to prevent injuries, and preformed administrative tasks.

University head football coach John Kelley said, "Jeff Stanley was fully committed to our athletes, a pioneer in the athletic training field that went above and beyond to assist, as well as a pleasure to have on staff."

Stanley also served multiple years as University High's boys' basketball assistant coach 1982-1985, 1988-1989, and 2009-2010. He also coached boys' basketball at St. Francis junior high and Trinity middle school.

Over the years, Stanley served as the University High School athletic department event supervisor for JV football, freshman football, boys' soccer, and girls' soccer.

Outside of school, Stanley served as the assistant pastor at New Life Ministries and leads/teaches Bible study sessions. He taught private driving lessons to the Morgantown community for over 30 years.

Stanley was an integral part of University High School's athletic department for almost 40 years. His impact on the students at University High School is unmeasurable.

This year's Inductees will be introduced at 7:05 p.m. Friday, prior to the start of the Fairmont Senior at University football game.

Stephanie Burgess

Stephanie Burgess played soccer at University High School from 2001-2004. As a member of the girls' soccer team, she established herself as a premier prep standout in the region and in the state during her tenure

In her freshman season, Burgess scored 31 goals and had eight assists and was named honorable mention all-state. She scored 21 goals and had eight assists her sophomore season and was again named honorable mention all-state.

Burgess attended West Virginia School of Dentistry from 2009-2013

Frances Wade

Frances Wade worked at University High School for 44 years from 1965-2009, where she served as the financial secretary for UHS.

She was the behind-the-scenes foundation of the University High School athletic department during her tenure. She dedicated much of her life to University High School athletics and her commitment to the school is beyond compare.

Without Wade, the University High School athletic department would not have survived. In addition to her duties as the school's financial secretary, she took on many responsibilities for the athletic department that included preparing the official's checks for every athletic event, preparing and counting money boxes for every athletic event, writing purchase orders for every athletic purchase, keeping track and preparing financial statements for each athletic program's fundraising accounts, paying officials at athletic events, selling tickets at most of the athletic events and assigning other ticket workers when additional staff was needed.

Wade assisted the administration with any issues or problems that occurred at athletic events. She was a large contributor to the everyday operations of University High School.

Wade was an extremely responsible, dependable, and dedicated person to University High School Athletics. She always went the extra mile and demonstrated an exceptional commitment to University High School and its athletic department. Her impact on the UHS Athletic Department is unmeasurable.

Angels star Shohei Ohtani's elbow surgery went well, Los Angeles manager Phil Nevin says

Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. Shohei Ohtani's elbow surgery on Tuesday went well, Los Angeles manager Phi Nevin said.

The Angels' two-way star is expected to be available as a hitter on opening day next season and return to the mound in 2025.

"He's in good spirits," Nevin said before Wednesday night's game at Tampa Bay. "He knows everything went fine with the surgery. He's in the recovery process right now."

Ohtani tore the ulnar collateral ligament in his right elbow on Aug. 23, ending his pitching season. He continued as a batter through Sept. 3 until an oblique strain.

Los Angeles Dodgers head team physician Dr. Neal ElAttrache operated on Ohtani at the Cedars-Sinai Kerlan-Jobe Institute in Los Angeles. He said in a statement that the sides decided to "reinforce the healthy ligament in place," suggesting the UCL wasn't reconstructed via Tommy John surgery.

ElAttrache also formed Tommy John surgery on Ohtani on Oct. 1, 2018.

Kareem Hunt thrilled to re-sign with Browns

Associated Press

BEREA, Ohio — Something stopped Kareem Hunt from signing elsewhere in free agency.

There were other choices for him as a free agent, quality teams in good cities. But the running back felt there was just one place for him.

Home. Cleveland.

On Wednesday, Hunt's patience paid off.

"It worked out, obviously," he said on a Zoom call with reporters. "I'm right up the street from my house. I guess it worked out in ways that I can't even explain."

In a strange twist, Hunt returned to his hometown Browns, who didn't re-sign him in the offseason but were desperate to add a quality running back after star Nick Chubb suffered a season-ending knee injury Monday night at Pittsburgh.

Hunt spent the past four years playing alongside and behind Chubb, giving Cleveland one of the NFL's top backfield tandems. And while he's thrilled, Hunt wishes his latest homecoming was under different circumstances.

"That one hurt," said Hunt, who couldn't bear the sight of Chubb being helped up and carted off. "I hate seeing that happen to one of my brothers, and the guy that I care so much about and would go to war for any time of the day."

The Browns signed Hunt to a oneyear deal worth up to $4 million, a person familiar with the negotiations told The Associated Press. Hunt's deal includes numerous incentives, said the person who spoke to The AP on condition of anonymity because the team is not making details of the contract

After a turbulent 2022 season, Hunt's time in Cleveland came to an apparent end when the team elected not to retain the 28-year-old. He made free agency visits to a few other teams while holding out hope the Browns would call.

The NFL is making data-driven progress on leg muscle injury prediction and prevention

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The NFL 's health and safety initiatives focus heavily on concussions, the face of football's ever-present danger.

Torn knee ligaments are instant headlines, ending seasons for star players in a split second.

There's an even bigger thief of time lurking within every team in the league.

Lower extremity injuries those pesky and painful strains of the leg muscles — outrank all of the others in cumulative absences from practices and those precious 17 games on the schedule. The NFL has thus committed millions of dollars to better predict and prevent them — and their recurrence.

"I don't think a lot of people thought of this as a really bigticket injury five or 10 years ago," said Dr. Christina Mack, a chief scientific officer at IQVIA, the health data firm that conducts third-party injury analysis for the league. "While it doesn't keep them out for the rest of the season, it's a highly impactful injury that does prevent players from playing. Then they need to manage the injury, their rehabilitation and make sure they don't have a recurabout it, we tell them, 'Reducing strains is a winning strategy."

Just ask Cooper Kupp.

The MVP of the Super Bowl for the 2021 champion Los Angeles Rams, Kupp's comeback from a severely sprained ankle that cut short his 2022 season was derailed by a hamstring strain that forced him out of practice on Aug. 1. He traveled to Minnesota to see a specialist after a setback. Then he was placed on injured reserve, requiring him to miss at least the first four games.

This season, 36 different players have landed on the inactive list for at least one game after appearing on the league-mandated report during the week with a leg muscle injury, including 28 for hamstrings, according to an Associated Press review.

In Week 1, 43 players landed on the injury report with either a hamstring, calf, groin or thigh problem, and 22 of them didn't play in the game. For Week 2, there were 50 such players and, again, 22 of them were inactive. Atlanta specialist Cordarrelle Patterson (thigh), Dallas left guard Tyler Smith (hamstring), Dallas safety Donovan Wilson (calf) and Green Bay wide receiver Christian Watson (hamstring) are among the reg-rence. As we talk to the teams ulars who've yet to play because injuries in the league result in of leg muscle trouble.

> Progress is being made, though.

Last season, overall injuries were down by 5.6% and preseason injuries hit a seven-year low the NFL, attributed largely to the reduction of these leg muscle injuries.

Informed by the data harvested and analyzed by IQVIA, the league last year tightened up preseason practice time limits for the first four days on the field and again for the first four days of padded workouts. Players were required to wear biomechanical sensors during the ramp-up periods for further analysis during that critical window. What resulted was a 26% decrease from 2021 in leg muscle injuries reported during the first two weeks of training camp and a 16% drop for the entire preseason.

The scientific advisory board created in 2016 by the NFL, which has spent most of its $40 million on concussion research, awarded a $4 million grant in 2021 for a four-year study of hamstring prevention and treatment that was launched by a team led by University of Wisconsin researcher Dr. Bryan Heiderscheit. Nearly threequarters of all hamstring missed time.

Anyone who's ever tried to run fast without a proper warmup can attest to the vulnerability of the hamstring in a quick-burst sport such as football. The muscle crosses both the knee and the hip, for one, making it more susceptible to trouble.

Research has found that during acceleration from 80% to 100% of an athlete's sprint speed, the amount of mechanical energy the muscle must absorb increases by 50%.

"That's a big change in load on that muscle. It all of a sudden has not experienced that sort of load in quite some time and it may not be ready for it," Heiderscheit said. "What we strongly encourage all athletes to do is to make sure they respect speed and train at that full intensity enough where your muscle is conditioned for it.'

Roughly 400 players from BYU, Indiana, North Carolina, Notre Dame and Wisconsin are being studied for three years each by Heiderscheit's team, using baseline offseason measurements such as sprint mechanics for all participants and deeper dives on those players who injure their hamstrings including MRI exams and postrehabilitation strength tests.

thought would fit well into their defensive scheme.

The result has been a defensive line that is by far the Mountaineers' best unit on defense and may very well end up being one of the best in the Big 12.

"I felt like the defensive line played well through fall camp," Brown said. "We went through fall camp and we knew we were pretty good on the offensive line. A year ago, it was really one-sided, our offensive line won almost every day. In this fall camp, it wasn't like that. Not that this offensive line didn't still win a majority of the time, but it wasn't one-sided at all."

Martin has remained a starter, becoming the group's not-so-vocal leader, and he has been joined in the starting lineup by Mike Lockhart and Eddie Vesterinen, both backups last season.

Through three games, WVU ranked fourth in the Big 12 in both rushing yards allowed per game (93.0) and vards allowed per carry (2.8).

"It's how they play I'm way more proud of than the statistics," Lesley said. "They're playing hard, they're playing with a lot of energy and they're playing together."

Martin and Vesterinen have been more than solid on the ends while Lockhart has been a stud in the middle, registering a team-high three tackles for

The real story up front, however, has been WVU's rotational pieces. They are all players who had very little experience before this year and are now producing the Mountaineers with premium snaps up front.

Fatorma Mulbah saw very few snaps in three seasons at Penn State before transferring this offseason and is now second on the team with two tackles for loss. Tomiwa Durojaiye played even less in his first season at Kentucky and now leads the Mountaineers with 2.5 sacks. Davoan Hawkins played at FCS Tennessee State the last three seasons and has a tackle for loss and a pass deflection this year.

"I think we've done a very nice job of evaluating exactly what we need and making the scheme fit those guys," Lesley said. "When you go out and create (evaluations) based on need and fit, you can find some really, really good players that create a quality room and quality depth and I think that's what you're seeing."

Evaluating players is difficult, especially when you're looking at guys at other schools who barely saw the field.

"You just trust your evaluation," Lesley said. "There are certain things, athletically, that vou look for...You see things that you know can carry over athletically into the game of football. Nobody is ever going to be 100%, but if you trust it, believe in what you see and stick with it, you're going to be right more than you're wrong."

Other in-house guys Asani Redwood, Hammond Russell and Jalen Thornton played less than 100 combined snaps last year and yet have become key rotation pieces in 2023. Lesley said that's a credit to defensive line coach Andrew Jackson.

who is in his third year at WVU.

"AJ's fundamentally probably the best I've ever been around," Lesley said. "You get into a tenure somewhere and it takes time to get your guys and your attitude and your approach to take over. It takes time to do that and I think that's what you're seeing."

Building a room full of backups and depth players certainly doesn't build a lot of preseason hype, but the only thing that matters is how they play on Saturdays. And so far, that group of previous unknowns has been exactly what WVU's defense has needed.

"It always starts there," Lesley said. "I think you're only as good as you are upfront."

Their test this week will be a Texas Tech team that features the Big 12's fifth-leading rusher Brooks Tahj p.m./ESPN+). The senior has 268 rushing yards and is averaging 7.2 yards per carry. He ran for 107 yards and two touchdowns in a 48-7 win over WVU last season.

OFFENSE

WVU ran the ball 51 times against Pitt, compared to just 11 pass attempts, and still managed 151 yards on the ground.

"It was like running against a goalline defense every single time," Scott said. "For (Donaldson) to be able to find yards beyond what was blocked is really good."

Teams know what's coming too. The Mountaineers are running the ball twice as much as they're passing it through three games — 140 runs to 70 passes.

"They're going to come out and they're going to run the football." said Texas Tech coach Jerry McGuire, who will face WVU this p.m./ESPN+). Saturday (3:30)"They're going to run the football and whenever you think they're going to pass the ball, they're going to run the football again.'

At its current pace, WVU would finish with over 2,400 rushing yards this season, its most since 2016.

Building up the offensive line has been a years-long project for Scott, head coach Neal Brown and offensive line coach Matt Moore, who all came to WVU in 2019. Four of the five starters were recruited and developed in-house and Nester transferred in after only two seasons at Virginia Tech. Four of the five are in their third year as full-time starters.

"We were all pretty young when we first started and I just think that has helped a lot," Nester said. "Being able to develop and grow as those young players until now we're in our third season has been fantastic.

"Playing next to somebody you're been playing with for years, it's easy to know how they're going to play a certain play or what their technique is like.'

The group is anchored by Frazier, a preseason All-American, at center with Nester and Milum as all-conference caliber tackles.

The more WVU continues to run the ball this season, the more teams will expect it, but Nester said the offensive line welcomes the challenge.

"There's nothing better than being able to run the ball even though they know you're running the ball," Nester said. "I think it's the best feeling in the world when they're loading the box and we're still able to produce yardage."

WVU is third in the Big 12 in rushing attempts, just three behind leader Cincinnati, and Texas Tech is in the bottom half of Big 12 defenses in both yards per carry (3.9) and yards per game (143).

WVU only averaged 2.8 yards per carry in a 48-10 loss to the Red Raiders last season. Scott said a big part of that dismal performance was the offensive line not executing, something they hope to change on Saturday. "When I say not executing, it was not being able to control the trenches like we did last week. Not being able to even pitch and catch it," Scott said. "They know (they have to be better), they absolutely know it."

Husband discloses partner's salary to friend without permission

DEAR HARRIETTE: The other day I was driving home with my husband when he got a call from a good friend of his. His friend was venting about being unhappy with the base salary at his new job. My husband then revealed that he should be happy with that salary, and how it is more than I am making now. Though I don't believe that my husband had malicious intent, I was angry that he disclosed my salary without my permission. I told him then and there that he had no right to offer that information to his friend, and his defense was that he would not care if I did the same to him. Am I overreacting? PRIVATE INFO

DEAR PRIVATE INFO: Don't wait for an apology. You could be waiting for a long time. What you can do is establish clear lines of demarcation for what you consider to be private about your life. Think about what else you don't want your husband to share. Make a list and recommend that he do the same. This is something you may want to consider doing from time to time to ensure that you are on the same page.

Also, if you know that your spouse finds it difficult to keep certain information to himself, you may choose to withhold sensitive details as an extra layer of protection.

DEAR HARRIETTE: Since moving to a new city for work, I've had trouble meeting people. A former classmate who lives in the same area asked me out for dinner, and I went. It was clear to me that he was hoping for more than friendship, but I'm not romantically interested in him. Nevertheless, I'm considering spending more time with him to see if he'll invite me to join his circle of friends. That way I'll know people other than just him. Would you say this is a good approach, or could it end up backfiring?

NEED FRIENDS DEAR NEED FRIENDS: Yes, you should continue to spend time with this friend, but you must be honest with him. Tell him vou like him as a friend. but nothing more. Ask him if he would consider inviting you to other events where you can meet people. Tell him candidly you have not met people in the area yet and want to expand your network. Find out if he is willing to include you in his circle.
